Why do people take Xanax?

Xanax is a benzodiazepine medication used for treating short-term anxiety. People take Xanax as it is used on-label for treating panic and anxiety disorders.

Xanax can also be used off-label for treating preoperative anxiety. Several people become anxious before undergoing surgery, which leads to arousal of the symptoms of anxiety. It also can cause difficulty in sedating the patient. At that time, Xanax came into play.

If a patient has suffered a panic attack, then Xanax can be used as it is an excellent treatment for panic disorder. Because it starts affecting very quickly. Xanax, when used, starts showing its effect within an hour. The impact of this medication could last for about four hours.

Patients suffering from GAD can also use Xanax as it is helpful in treating anxiety disorders. Xanax can be used during the initial treatment for GAD but is not considered as a good long-term medication as it could be habit-forming.

The long-term medications might take six to eight weeks to start affecting. Xanax shows its effect immediately but should stop once long-term medications start working.

Is Xanax an Antidepressant?

People often think that Xanax is an Alprazolam that is used for treating anxiety and panic disorders. Also, used for treating depression as anxiety and depression go hand-in-hand.

However, less do they know that Xanax itself can be linked with developing or worsening existing depression.

Xanax acts to control anxiety symptoms, even at the time when caused due to depression. Thus, doctors can prescribe Xanax to a patient if they have depression with anxiety.

Depression itself isn't the reason for using Xanax; anxiety due to depression is. Xanax, when used acts as a depressant of the Central nervous system without knowing that it can actually increase or cause depression.

The withdrawal symptoms of this medication are linked to depression, which can only be treated by therapy and the use of effective antidepressants.

Why mixing alcohol and Xanax so dangerous?

Xanax is a prescription drug. It is sold in its generic form under the chemical name Alprazolam. If you buy Xanax online, you will know that it is a benzodiazepine. Benzodiazepine medications are commonly prescribed to treat the symptoms of anxiety, panic disorder, and occasionally, withdrawal from the intake of alcohol. When taken beyond the prescribed limit, it can cause dangerous, and even fatal, side effects.

Similarly, alcohol is also considered a central nervous system depressant. Because of this, if you order Xanax online, the warning label of Xanax warns against the intake of alcohol or mixing the drug with other non-prescription drugs.

Both alcohol and Xanax increase the activity of GABA (gamma amino-butyric acid) in the brain. When depressants are mixed together, it may result in the death of the patient who is taking the combination.

Therefore, before you buy Xanax online, you must know that Xanax intensifies the effects of alcohol and vice versa. When taken with each other, alcohol and Xanax become more dangerous than if either one of them is taken on their own. As a result, you may face side effects like excessive sedation, hazardous accidents, respiratory depression, cardiac problems, and loss of consciousness.

Reduced activity in the central nervous system (CNS) can lead to dangerous side effects. Patients taking Xanax and alcohol together are at risk of having:-

- Vertigo
- Fainting
- Slow breathing
- Drowsiness
- Slurred speech
- Impaired coordination
- Nausea
- Memory loss
- Irritability
- Anxiety
- Delirium
- Seizures
- Coma

- Death

Therefore, taking Xanax and alcohol together is a never good idea. Therefore, if you want to know why you should not take the two together, then you should consult a health expert.

After that, you should start the intake of the drug with a prescription that you receive after you buy Xanax online.
